Abstract

This Article analyses the structure of the court expenditures at the civil judgement of the first instance court in the Republic of Albania from the perspective of the Civil Procedure Code in Albania, which being the main pillar of the civil procedural right in Albania, has treated also the composition of these expenditures, during the process of the definition and treatment of the court expenditures in general and especially their structure. Although it has been over 20 years since the entry into force of the Code of Civil Procedure, still the treatment by the judicial bodies of the first instance court and by the first instance administrative courts, represent the diversity on many aspects, especially in terms of composition of the court expenditures. This situation stems from the lack of detailed doctrinal treatment on the field. The court expenditures very often are equal to the research value of the trial's object, but even in cases when there's no approaching to the value of such researches, again the court expenditures pose a burden to be paid by the parties, being relatively considerable over the average country incomes. In this article there will be treated the fact that the Code of the Civil Procedure does not appear to have anticipated in detail all the aspects relating to the composition of the court expenditures. The court disposition on this aspect in contrast to the foundation of the judgment, can be appealed at the Appeal Court within a very short time, through a special appeal, which includes a 5 day period. This article brings its contribution especially in clarifying these delicate and important aspects at the first instance civil court.
