

Ethics and the “red lines” in online media in Kosovo

PhD (C.) Lirie Aliu

Contemporary Social Sciences-SEEU, Macedonia

Abstract

The journalist's social and professional status is a topic that requires a multidisciplinary approach to identify the ways of information and its assignment. Scientific reviews are subjects of a study in the interest of mass communication science, focusing on the field of journalism and communication politics on themes and expressed through the knowledge of people responses and their opinion. Nowadays in the time of modernity which is characterized by a fast increase, distribution and continuous interaction through media across the globe, thus making the mediation process an essential feature of society and of everyday life. Problems come to light when a false and defamatory statement about an individual is published to a third party, causing damage to the reputation of the person. Each state creates defamation laws, although Kosovo still has no law regarding defamation for online media even though it may be considered responsible for defamatory communications. Along with the transformation of technology conditions and tools the profession of journalism is transformed as well. The socio-professional status of a journalist depends so much on the objective situation of the journalist's profession, which, in addition to many other circumstances, is largely determined by the society they are trained and the media owner. And hence my research questions in relation to the news and credibility of the broader audience.

Keywords: Ethics, journalist, defamation law, online media.

Full Text: PDF

This work is licensed under Creative Commons Attribution 3.0 License.

European Journal of Economics, Law and Social Sciences ISSN 2519-1284 (print) ISSN
2510-0429 (online)

Copyright © IIPCCCL-International Institute for Private, Commercial and Competition law