

Communication as an object of reflection of the contemporary world

Dr. Shpetim Zymberaj

University of Prizren "Ukshin Hoti" Kosovo

Dr. Ilir Krusha

University of Prizren "Ukshin Hoti" Kosovo

Abstract

Communication means sharing information with someone else. When two or more people are engaged in a verbal or non-verbal exchange, they are involved in interpreting information. This way when people are together, communication is created. Communication happens at all times, by everyone, even at times when we do not say anything out loud.

All successful people like businessmen, scientists, executives, actors, politicians, diplomats, engineers, politicians, etc., had to learn the "Art of Communication" in their early school years. Surprisingly, today when it's most needed they do not teach it at schools.

Our body language most of the times 'talks' more than words do. Communication is mostly used when people exchange or play in a role. Hence, communication is seen as a reflection of the contemporary world. Acting or a show needs a more special emphasis on communication and in this case we are dealing with the effort for a "played" communication, which should appear as real. Words or silence, action or inaction, they all have a message. They influence and reflect on those who are part of the communication.

Keywords: communication, contemporary world, media, reflection, reality.

Full Text: PDF

This work is licensed under Creative Commons Attribution 4.0 License.

Academic Journal of Business, Administration, Law and Social Sciences ISSN 2410-3918 (print)

ISSN 2410-8693 (online)

Copyright © IIPCCL-International Institute for Private, Commercial and Competition law